Biographical Information

The Circuit Court for the District of Virginia was set up under the Judiciary Act of 1789. The court had both original and appellate jurisdiction. The original jurisdiction was concurrent with Statute courts in all suits of civil nature both at common law and equity where the amount in controversy exceeded $500 and where the United States was a plaintiff. The circuit court also had jurisdiction over all suits involving major criminal offenses against the laws of the United States, all suits where an alien was a party, and all suits between citizens of different states. It also reviewed the decrees of the district courts in civil actions where the amount in controversy was more than $500. The appellate jurisdiction of the court was transferred to the newly created circuit courts by an act of 3 March 1891 (26 Stat. 826), which established a circuit court of appeals (United States Court of Appeals) in each circuit. The Judicial Code of 1911 abolished the circuit courts as of 1 January 1912, and transferred their remaining jurisdiction and records to the district courts.
