George Mason University Oral History Program collection, #R0121, Special Collections Research Center, George Mason University Libraries.

Historical Information

Special Collections Research Center began operation originally as the repository for the records of the Federal Theatre Project placed on loan to George Mason University by the Library of Congress. An outgrowth of George Mason University's Institute for the Federal Theatre Project, the department began to collect rare books and University Archives in 1978 and was named Special Collections & Archives in 1984. In 2018, the name changed again to Special Collections Research Center.

The Oral History Program (OHP) records and preserves oral histories documenting personal perspectives about the creation, development, and growth of the university, key collections within Special Collections Research Center, and communities in the region of Northern Virginia.

Established in 1999, the program has conducted over 300 interviews, focused mainly on George Mason University's history and the surrounding Fairfax area. Encompassing diverse members of the university community, from past university presidents to former students, the interviews contain a wide range of voices and perspectives.

Scope and Content

Contains over 300 interviews focused mainly on the history of George Mason University and the surrounding Fairfax, Virginia area. Interviews were conducted between 1978 and the present and cover the years 1957 to present.

Related Material

The Special Collections Research Center also holds many other oral history collections with a particular emphasis on theatre and Northern Virginia.
