(Robert Edward), 1807-1870General

This document is a set of general orders issued by Robert E. Lee to the Confederate Army on February 22, 1865. These orders are a set of new standards to observe in the face of waning supplies and troops. The orders set out that vacant positions are to be filled as soon as possible upon their opening with troops from the rear. Lee goes on to explain new punishment and more stringent rules over any disobedience or evasion of duty.

This memorandum book contains several notes written by Robert E. Lee during his tenure at Washington College, as well as a set of names and addresses of those he had corresponded with. The memos range from financial management of college resources to Lee's personal thoughts on the role of education in the fabric of society. The list of names and corresponding addresses appears to be composed of various people Lee remained in contact with, some of which being professors and others being former Confederate officers.

The written memos are written beginning on one side of the memo book while the names and addresses begin on the reverse side.

Abstract Brigadier General St. John writes to General Lee on June 20, 1865 with explanations of his actions and movements during the final days of the Army of Northern Virginia. Beginning in February of 1865, he explains how he "proceeded at once to organize as auxiliaries to the regular operations of the Bureau" (Bureau of Nitre and Mining). By March, St. John was promoted to Brigadier General and appointed Commissary General of Subsistence. He goes on to explain his acquisition of rations in March. The majority of the remains of these subsistence supplies were abandoned, because the Danville Richmond Railroad was taken over by the evacuation of the Confederate Government Offices. He explains that all available army wagons were filled and he left Richmond on April 3 towards Amelia Court House where he met up with the "Genl. Commanding". Rations were taken to Farmville, where the army took most of them on April 7. St. John suggested to the Quarter Master General that the rest be sent further west, to prevent capture with the enemy close by. This was not heeded due to the "extreme uncertainty" of the situation. On April 8, the cars containing the supplies were captured and used to forward Union troops to Appomattox Court House. St. John writes "After the completion of duties in connection with Genl. Johnston's Army, my official action as Commissary General ceased in Genl. Taylor's department. I was paroled May 22nd." St. John goes on to defend his actions.

Beverley Tucker, who was charged as a conspirator in the assassination plot on President Lincoln, sent this letter secretly to Robert E. Lee from Montreal, Canada. The letter explains that if the Civil War's history is left to be written by the "historians which will spring up in Yankeedom" it will not properly and honestly explain the South's cause. He therefore suggests that Robert E. Lee join him in Canada and then sail to England with him, where Lee can write a history of the war, the "sale of which will secure for a you a handsome independence."

Abstract Edward Lee Childe, Robert E. Lee's nephew, had allowed a family friend to read a letter to him from his "Aunt Mary" (Mary Custis Lee). The letter divulged details of Richmond in the two months after its fall as well as the sentiments of Robert E. Lee and Mary Custis Lee regarding the war and figures such as Jefferson Davis. The family friend, without permission, submitted a copy of the letter to a newspaper, which published it. The newspaper wrote that the letter was "from the pen of a lady residing in Richmond, Virginia, where she is widely known and beloved for the admirable simplicity of her life and character, and for the practice of 'all the charities of mother, daughter, and sister.'" It was fairly obvious that the letter in the newspaper was written by Mary Custis Lee, mostly thanks to allusions to her husband and children, and for this reason Childe wrote to Robert E. Lee to apologize and explain the circumstances.

Worsley to Mr. Childe written from Herndon Sept 15th (most likely 1865). On the reverse is a note by General Lee which states: 29 Sept '65 Edwd Lee Childe sends dedication of P.S. Ensley's (?) Of his translation of Illiad. A translation of Homer is mentioned in the text of Edward's letter."

Abstract In 1865, shortly after the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, Robert E. Lee was approached in Richmond by C.B. Richardson of the University Publishing Company of New York. No contract was signed, but the two came to an informal agreement whereby University Publishing Company would have publication privileges if Lee completed a manuscript. For the next five years the two kept up correspondence, with Lee often requesting materials that Richardson would then search out and furnish for him. This letter written to Lee by Richardson, discusses some of the records that Lee had requested from Richardson. Richardson sent Lee a set of "Rebellion Records and some other works bearing upon the campaigns in Va" as well as a gold pen, hoping that it might suit Lee. Richardson mentioned that he was trying to gather General Warren's report made on Chancellorsville as well the letters and diaries from Colonel John S. Mosby's raids. He was also waiting for Robert Lewis Dabney's "Life of Stonewall". Richardson had made a request for the documents captured by U.S. Grant and being held by the government. He suggested that Lee write to General Grant to ask for his help. Richardson mentioned that he was looking into the whereabouts of General Longstreet and General Hampton and that he had learned that General Mahone was "making his home in Norfolk." He asked Lee if he would write an introduction to his father's memoirs of the Revolutionary War, in order for a new copyright and reprint.

John Letcher, a Lexington, Virginia native, Washington Academy alumnus and governor of Virginia from 1860 to 1864, wrote to Robert E. Lee from Lexington not long after his release from prison. Letcher had appointed Lee as commander in chief of Virginia's army after Virginia seceded from the Union, but before Virginia agreed that its forces would be under the direction of Confederate President Jefferson Davis. Letcher explains to Lee that he was arrested on May 20 under an order from the Secretary of War, however, Letcher was never charged. He was imprisoned in Washington D.C for more than six weeks, but wrote of his excellent treatment, especially from members of Congress, many who he knew while serving as a member of the House of Representatives from 1851 to 1859. He wrote of an interview with President Andrew Johnson after his release, writing that: "I had a very agreeable interview with President Johnson. He received me most kindly and courteously, and alluded to our former service in Congress, in pleasant terms. He spoke liberally and in the most conciliatory terms of the South, and the Southern people. His manner indicated sincerity and if we meet him in a spirit such as he exhibited, we will have reason to regard him as our best friend. Now that the war is ended, we should exhibit no sullen and dissatisfied spirit, but should encourage harmony and conciliation. We have to live under the same government, and it is the part of wisdom and duty, to seek to restore confidence, and cultivate kindly relations. We must show sincerity, honesty and faithfulness in fulfilling the obligations we have assumed. This is the advice I have given to our people, ever since your surrender." Letcher goes on to tell Lee of the great respect and kind feelings that officers and others in the North had for him.

Abstract R. H. Phillips wrote to General Smith, the superintendent of Virginia Military Institute at the time, inquiring about helping a friend, Mr. Stieff of Baltimore, to donate a piano to help furnish the Lee home. It was Mr. Stieff's understanding that the citizens of Lexington were furnishing the home and he and his brother wished to contribute. Charles M. Stieff was a German immigrant who came to the Baltimore in 1842. He began a business importing German pianos for sale in Baltimore and eventually began building his own high quality pianos. His two sons eventually joined the business and one of them is likely the "Mr. Stieff" referenced in the letter. The accompanying letter is from William Nelson Pendleton confirming his conversation with Mr. Steiff on the subject.

Abstract James Carmichael was a former chaplain for the Confederate Army who later became the rector of the Episcopal St. James' Parish near Louisville, Kentucky. The ladies of his new church wanted to hold a fair to raise money for "the benefit of our church in Virginia." Carmichael was chosen to ask Lee to sign 250 photographs for sale at the fair. Carmichael writes "Should this request not meet your approval, you may rest assured that your refusal will not be construed into any lukewarmness in the welfare of the church, but only as a feature of that unassailed modesty, which [has gained you] the admiration of the world."

Abstract In 1865, shortly after the surrender of the Army of Northern Virginia, Robert E. Lee was approached in Richmond by C.B. Richardson of the University Publishing Company of New York. No contract was signed, but the two came to an informal agreement whereby University Publishing Company would have publication privileges if Lee completed a manuscript. For the next five years the two kept up correspondence, with Lee often requesting materials that Richardson would then search out and furnish for him. With this letter Richardson sends a copy of "Sherman and his Campaigns bound volumes of the Army and Navy Journal." He wrote that he will be following up with a copy of Batchelder's battle map of Gettysburg, which "has the endorsement of General Meade and all the Corps commanders." Richardson is currently copying General Grant's "daily order of march after crossing the Rapidan River." Richardson requested that Custis review Robert E. Lee's biography in Richardson's volume of "Southern Gen'ls".

Abstract Green wrote to Lee to inform him on the details of a summons to the Court of Conciliation in Richmond. Mr. Green wrote that in August of 1862, while General Pope's Army was retreating, Lee had stayed several nights at a home in between Brandy Station and Culpeper Courthouse. The home had been owned by a Mr. Wise, who supposedly sold it to Mr. Smith. It was in contention that Mr. Smith ever owned the home since Mr. Wise had since passed away. According to Smith, he owned the home and met Lee when Lee stayed there in the summer of 1862 and therefore Smith took out a subpoena for Lee. The official court summons is with the document.

Talladega, Ala. Jany. 20th 1866 Dear Sir, In common with your fellow countrymen of the South, I rejoice that you have consented to assume a position, in which you may spend the remainder of your honoured life, in the quiet, and honourable work pf educating our noble young men. I trust the Legislature of your venerable Commonwealth, will respond favourably & promptly to the plan for enlarging the endowments of your college proposed through you. The ravages of the war just ended, has left many of us without sons to educate, more without present means for educating those who were spared. Yet with proper efforts, our colleges may be re-endowed and our children educated, within our own country, & by professors & teachers, of our own country, by birth, education, moral instincts, and habits of thought. I have one son only left me, now near fifteen years of age; my eldest & only other son, living when the war began, having fallen at one of the guns of the Washington, N.O. Artillery, near Drury's Bluff, on the 16th of May 1864. My surviving son, so soon, as he learned you had accepted the Presidency of Washington College, expressed a strong desire, that I should send him there, as soon as he was prepared to enter. I propose gratifying him, if it is possible for me to meet the expenses; provided, non residents of the State of Virginia are allowed to enter that college. It was formerly a State Military College, & I have an impression that its privileges were limited to the Sons of residents of the State. I write for information on that Subject: If I am mistaken in this, then be pleased to inform me, 1st What sum per annum, will cover the entire expenses, except for clothing & traveling. 2nd Whither the course of instruction is upon the plan of the University of Virginia, or that of the ordinary college curriculum of four years, at the end of which the degree of A.B. is conferred? I do not expect to send my son off before the summer or fall of the present year, perhaps not so soon as that, the time depending upon the fitness of his preparation. A particular statement of the extent of preparation in the languages & mathematics, necessary for entering in the lowest class, & of the progress required for each succeeding year will be thankfully received. What is the population of Lexington; To what extent, if any has the Town been destroyed; Is it likely to maintain its former reputation for healthfulness, & for high moral & religious tone? With an apology for the length of this communication, & the expression of a desire that any response you may be pleased to make, shall accord with your own convenience and leisure. I am very respectfully Your obt. Servt Geo. S. Walden

Creator Allan, William, 1837-1889

Scope and Contents

Between February 1868 and February 1870 Washington College professor and former Confederate Ordinance officer, William Allan, had five conversations with college president Robert E. Lee which he manually recorded in this memo book which he titled "Conversations with Gen. R. E. Lee". Soon after each conversation, Allan described retreating to his office to record the highlights. In 1886, former Washington College Clerk of faculty and Librarian, Edward Clifford "E.C." Gordon shared with Allan, by mail, a similar manuscript reminiscence of a discussion he had with Lee in 1868 on the Sharpsburg/Antietam campaign, specifically the story of Lee's "Lost Dispatch". Allan transcribed Gordon's reminiscence into his memo book - with a background note. (Gordon's original reminiscence was then purportedly returned to him.) The memo book is accompanied by an informative 1886 letter from Gordon to Allan on the Lee conversations. There are also two letters regarding the gift of the memoranda book to Washington and Lee University in 1946 by Mrs. Louisa P. Allan, William Allan's daughter - in - law. Subjects of the conversations include Lee's objectives and strategy at different points during the American Civil War; Lee's decision to resign from the United States Army on April 20, 1861 including his conversations with U.S. Army General Winfield Scott; and commentary, at times critical, of Federal and Confederate generals and leaders including George McClellan, D.H. Hill, James Longstreet, Jefferson Davis, Richard Ewell, Thomas J. "Stonewall" Jackson, Joseph Johnston, J.E.B. Stuart, and John-Fitz Porter. Civil War battles mentioned or discussed include Antietam, Fredericksburg, Gaines Mill and the Seven Days Battles, Chancellorsville, Gettysburg, and the fall of the defenses at Petersburg, Va.

Robert E. Lee's copy of D.H. Hill's post Civil War magazine "The Land We Love," which published an article pertaining to the story of Lee's "Lost Dispatch" - an order by General Robert E. Lee directing movements of his Army of Northern Virginia during the Maryland Campaign of 1862. It was lost by an unidentified Confederate courier and found by Union soldiers and subsequently forwarded to Union General George B. McClellan. The contents of the dispatch influenced the battles of South Mountain and Antietam.

Letter from E.C.(Edward Clifford)Gordon, former Washington College Clerk of Faculty, to Col. William Allan of the McDonough institute in Baltimore, Md. and former mathematics professor at Washington College between 1866 and 1873 regarding an accompanying memo book in which Gordon documented a long conversation he had with Robert E. Lee on February 16, 1868. A main theme of the letter is the content from the memo book regarding the story of Lee's "Lost Dispatch" during his Maryland Campaign of 1862. The second letter accompanied the memo book when it was given by Louisa P. Allan, Col. William Allan's daughter - in - law, to Washington and Lee University President Francis Pendleton Gaines in 1946.

Scope and Contents

Typescript notecards created during the 1940s with information on students who attended Washington College's undergraduate and law school during Robert E. Lee's presidency. Details included were, for the most part, limited to hometown (town, state) and current location at the time that the original information was gathered. This information was copied in the 1940s likely from some original list, perhaps from the Washington and Lee University alumni catalog of 1888.
