Biographical or Historical Information

James Bertram Haugh grew up on a working class dairy farm in Indiana. In high school, he was elected president of the Future Farmers of America and of his senior class. Upon graduation, he enrolled at Carroll College in Waukesha, Wisconsin. After holding several odd labor jobs, he knew that he wanted more in life. This inspired him to achieve better academically. He attempted seminary twice, drove a Chicago Transit Authority bus for a year, and worked for I.B.M. for 6 1/2 years. Later, he began a degree in Urban Studies at Loyola, and worked toward certification in secondary education in 1970. In 1973, James Haugh began teaching in the Sociology department of Old Dominion University, and continued his studies there. At this time, he became increasingly interested in economic, community, political, and labor organization, migrant labor, social change from the standpoint of the powerless, and hunger and malnutrition. In 1974, he became involved in a hunger organization called C.R.O.P. at a conference on hunger in Richmond. Haugh was eventually asked to serve as executive director of the organization.

It was these experiences, the connections he made through them, and his desire to learn what is needed to effect positive social change that led him to do his dissertation on power and influence in the Public Voluntary Not for Profit Sector. This study was carried out largely through a series of interviews with notable public figures in a place called "Colonial City" in 1977 and 1978. "Colonial City" is actually Norfolk, Virginia, and the people interviewed are given aliases in his study. Haugh posed these people with questions about the qualities possessed by effective leaders, what it is to be a "Virginian", how things get done, and what could make or break a project in the community. The results of his study are written into a book called Power and Influence in a Colonial City. His dissertation complete, James Bertram Haugh received his Ph.D. in Sociology from the University of Akron, Ohio, in the fall of 1978.

Scope and Contents

This collection relates mainly to James Bertram Haugh's course work at the University of Akron in 1977 and 1978. The bulk of the collection encompasses his dissertation research. Included are interviews with prominent Norfolk citizens, newspaper articles about the interviewees, resource articles for the study, and several rough drafts of the dissertation. Also found in the collection are other papers and course work by Haugh, and information on the Assembly on the Dimensions of Hunger and Malnutrition, of which Haugh was a part.

Description of Subordinate Components

Series I: Study of the Public Voluntary Not for Profit Sector of Colonial City

Unit ID Series I

Unit ID /repositories/5/archival_objects/55574

Unit Date circa 1962-1978, undated

Scope and Contents

This series centers around the writing and research for Haugh's dissertation about Norfolk, Virginia. Included in the series are drafts, notes, resources, interviews with citizens of Norfolk, and other material.

Sub-Series A: Dissertation

Unit ID Sub-Series A

Unit ID /repositories/5/archival_objects/55575

Unit Date circa 1977-1978, undated

Scope and Contents

This sub-series contains chapters 1-6 of the dissertation. These appear to be drafts, and not the final copies. Chapter 1 states the problem to be studied. Chapter 2 reviews the relevant literature. Chapter 3 discusses the methods used in the study. It also gives a personal background on James Haugh to help readers understand his interests, background, motivations, and biases in the study. Chapter 4 discusses what it is to be a Virginian. Chapter 5 explains the arrangements of power and influence in Colonial City. Chapter 6 profiles the influential people of Colonial City. Also included in this sub-series is the transcript from a class talk about James Haugh's book, Power and Influence in a Colonial City, which is the final copy of his dissertation. In this talk, he reveals that Colonial City is actually Norfolk, Virginia.
