Biographical / Historical

The United Order of Tents is an organization for African-American churchwomen founded in Norfolk, Virginia, in 1867 by former enslaved women, Annetta M. Lane (c.1838-1908) and Harriet R. Taylor. There are chapters across the United States. It is a secret society, with parts of membership and organizing only shared with members. It is the oldest benefit society for black women in the United States. At its height, national membership reached approximately 50,000 women. The United Order of Tents works to care for the sick and the elderly, and to help those in need.

Lane and Taylor created the organization with assistance from two abolitionists, Joliffe Union and Joshua R. Giddings. It was created as a fraternal lodge intended to be used as a stop on the underground railroad. The name, Southern District for the United Order of Tents refers to the tents that fugitive enslaved people often used as shelter.

The collection contains a membership certificate for Eliza Braxton.
